

Published on The National Law Review <https://natlawreview.com>

Ubiquiti Notifies Customers of Breach

Article By:

Linn F. Freedman

Ubiquiti, a manufacturer of products used for networks such as routers, webcams and mesh networks, announced this week that an unauthorized access to its systems hosted by a third-party cloud provider may have compromised customers' name, email address and "the one-way encrypted password to your account" as well as address and telephone number if that also had been provided.

Ubiquiti did not identify the name of the third-party cloud provider. It is urging customers to change their passwords and to enable multi-factor authentication.

Changing the default passwords on networking equipment such as routers and webcams is good cybersecurity hygiene, and even more important following a data breach of the manufacturer of these products.

Copyright © 2025 Robinson & Cole LLP. All rights reserved.

National Law Review, Volume XI, Number 14

Source URL: <https://natlawreview.com/article/ubiquiti-notifies-customers-breach>