When businesses face regulatory uncertainty, how can they effectively adapt, respond, and, if necessary, challenge government action?

In this episode of Speaking of Litigation, Epstein Becker Green attorneys Mike Brodlieb, Jim Flynn, Jimmy Oh, and Jack Wenik navigate the complexities of regulatory action and inaction. The conversation dives into the changing administrative landscape and covers how businesses can strategize to challenge regulations, the pros and cons of litigation, and the critical importance of aligning legal goals with practical business objectives.

The panelists also explore how agencies' evolving processes create both challenges and opportunities, including how internal agency relationships and unexpected legal arguments can shape outcomes. From assembling the right legal team to balancing risk and reward in high-stakes scenarios, they discuss real-world tactics for crafting solutions that address uncertainty while keeping business interests front and center.

Gain insight into how legal professionals are managing the intricate interplay between government regulation, litigation strategies, and client priorities in today's dynamic environment.
